Developed by the Arizona Commission on the Arts
Ratified by Commission Approval: September 16, 2010

EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

Development of the Arts Commission's strategic plan took place in fiscal years 2010 and 2011. Titled Building an Artistic Future for Arizona, the plan initially spanned four years (fiscal years 2011-2014) and was ratified by the Arts Commission's Governor-appointed board on September 16, 2010 for implementation October 01, 2010.

During fiscal year 2014, the Arts Commission elected to extend the plan to fiscal year 2016.

The Arts Commission is in the initial stages of planning a robust process to support the development of its next strategic plan. This planning process will take place in fiscal year 2015 and will expand upon the successful statewide engagement strategies implemented in fiscal years 2010 and 2011.

Building an Artistic Future for Arizona represents a cohesive set of strategies to advance a collective cause: stability and progress for the Arizona arts sector.

Desired Outcomes are developed as ideal results for the entire Arizona arts sector. Arts Commission Goals are developed as planned objectives for the Arts Commission itself.

AGENCY MISSION STATEMENT:

We imagine an Arizona where everyone can participate in and experience the arts.

DESIRED OUTCOMES:

1. Arizonans can access vibrant, quality arts and cultural activities wherever they live, and have opportunities to participate as practitioners, professionals, patrons, donors and volunteers.
2. Arizona residents can make healthy livable wages working in myriad facets of the arts. Their contributions are valued and respected.
3. Students have access to quality, robust arts education programs in Arizona schools. In-school arts opportunities are enhanced by meaningful opportunities in out-of-school and community settings.

PLAN DEVELOPMENT OVERVIEW:

Data Collection Phase

In fiscal years 2010 and 2011, the Arts Commission conducted a series of statewide listening session meetings in Flagstaff, Lake Havasu City, Mesa, Show Low, Surprise, Tubac, Tucson and Yuma, and at the conclusion of the 2010 Southwest Arts Conference in Chandler, Arizona. Arts Commission staff also led focused meetings with key stakeholders while providing services in Arizona communities, to examine constituents’ needs and concerns more thoroughly and in more intimate settings.

In this timeframe the Arts Commission’s broad mailing list was surveyed and focused survey/interview instruments were developed for artists, arts educators, arts administrators, city managers/mayors, faith leaders, and high school and college students, about the impact of the arts in their work and personal lives. Three separate survey instruments were developed for Arizona arts organizations to monitor the effects of the economic downturn on their sustainability, artistic product and services.

In addition, the Arts Commission consulted and partnered with local task forces on arts-based research, the results of which include the Asset Building for Artists Initiative with the Community Foundation for Southern Arizona and the landmark Arizona Arts Education Census with the Arizona Arts Education Research Institute, of which the Arts Commission is a collaborator.

Beyond listening sessions and surveys, the Arts Commission conducted a focused review of available research and publications provided by other statewide and regional sources, in particular the wealth of research made available by Arizona’s regional service organization, the Western States Arts Federation.

Approach to Data Collection

The Arts Commission framed its data collection approach around two core ideas:

1. Take full advantage of past efforts and existing data, no need to start from zero.

The Arts Commission promotes evaluation and assessment in all of its programs, its staff and Governor-appointed board continually evaluating and modifying programs to best utilize limited resources and to improve effectiveness and reach. In a typical year, the Arts Commission conducts or convenes between ten and fifteen surveys and focus groups, then analyzes feedback and implements strategic improvements to programs and services.

Because the Arts Commission has successfully integrated evaluative processes into its operational culture, at the outset of the planning phase there was a wealth of recent constituent data available to Arts Commission staff. In addition, the Arts Commission staff firmly believed that survey and listening session discussion would be richer and more meaningful if respondents were presented with a framework of ideas and then asked to provide feedback.

Therefore the agency chose not to conduct an open-ended feedback-gathering effort, but to start with five directional statements about which respondents could provide feedback and engage in deeper discussion. These statements were expansive in scope and were referred to throughout the planning phase as a “long-term vision for a sustainable arts sector.”

Though the Arts Commission did not set out to use the “long-term vision for a sustainable arts sector” as the framework for what would become the five Desired Outcomes statements within the strategic plan, the five points received overwhelming constituent support throughout the planning phase, and indeed were strengthened and shaped by constituent feedback in surveys and in in-person meetings.

2. Galvanize and empower the arts sector in the spirit of self-sufficiency.

Between fiscal years 2008 and 2012 the Arizona arts sector lost nearly 70% of state funding for the arts due to enacted legislative reductions (important to note that in per capita arts support, Arizona ranked near the bottom in national rankings prior to these reductions).

Losses included the elimination and “sweep” of the State-held Arizona ArtShare Endowment, constructed to provide an interest-based protected funding stream for the arts in perpetuity, built over twelve years with support from the Arizona State Legislature and the Arizona arts sector. With the elimination of what arts organizations and schools considered to be a model achievement, the arts sector experienced a loss in available grant funding and a significant blow to morale. In the wake of these losses, the Arts Commission was called upon to take on even larger roles as leader and catalyst.

Therefore the Arts Commission set out to develop a plan with the arts community, to empower the arts community: to rally artists, educators, administrators and advocates behind a cohesive set of strategies to advance our collective cause. Not simply a plan detailing what the Arts Commission intended to do to move the arts sector forward, but a plan outlining how we could improve our circumstances together.

Data Collection Results and Plan Development

After each listening session and survey, results were collated, analyzed and discussed with the Arts Commission staff, Governor-appointed board and other key stakeholders. Survey results and analytics were made available on the Arts Commission website in order to share data and to solicit additional constituent feedback.

In analyzing the collected data, several needs rose immediately to the top: constituents responded that they needed more funding support and asked the Arts Commission to continue providing professional development and training.

Overwhelmingly, constituents requested a statewide visibility campaign they could use to build public value for the arts in their communities, advance the conversation about arts and culture, and utilize in support of audience development and local arts advocacy efforts.

The Building an Artistic Future for Arizona strategic plan therefore contains a promotional campaign for the arts in Arizona, meant to build public value for the arts, advance the cultural conversation and develop a privately-held funding stream.

“The Choice is Art” will address some or all the following areas over the course of six years: the importance of access to quality arts education opportunities, the significant contributions of Arizona artists and arts professionals, the positive impact of the arts on community health and livability, the broad economic impact of Arizona’s arts and culture sector, and the singular role of the arts in promoting cultural understanding.
